

MAJOR CYCLE LOWS: Dow Jones, Nikkei, Shanghai, Precious Metals, Yen, Dollar

March 1, 2009

SUMMARY

February 8, 2009:

"Financial markets have seen their extremes, insofar as peak negative momentum and cross relationships are concerned. Remember, I have found that the turns in the relative strengths of key markets, tend to occur a few months before the individual markets themselves in fact reverse (with peak negative momentum)."

Last September, I wrote that cross relationships turn ahead of the individual markets, often by around 3 months, and that this knowledge can be used in a multiple of ways. I further expressed that these turns would include all asset classes and that hedge managers should therefore remain alert, rather than be overly focused on the fund withdrawals. Why?

The reason was that yearend was shaping up to be the turning points for the individual markets, when analyzing those cross relationships. This has been proven correct.

Then, at the end of the year, I wrote that the US market could pull in the wrong direction (down, since the intermediate trend shaping up is bullish) for the US inauguration. I wrote last week that that was proved incorrect. But maybe that pull was for the US State of the Union. Either way, it doesn't matter. What does matter is that new bull markets abound...in what truly matters, certainly to hedge managers, as well as those following the bear market counsel of SKGS.

Precious metals have taken off against treasuries and equities, respectively. Asia is bullish. Shanghai has erupted against New York (see SHANGHAI), while Japan has long since bottomed versus the West, as well (surely in Yen).

The only reason why investors have lost money instead of making a ton of it without stress and greed is that they have been unable to adopt a simple prescription:

Precious metals, Yen, Swiss Franc (equals 4 currencies) – YES. Long term Treasuries (as of 2009) and Western equities – NO. Japan – YES. Shanghai in 2008 – NO. Shanghai in 2009 – YES.

Straight long investments (except the 4 currencies) – NO. Hedge investments – YES!

I don't do the investment bankers' work for them anymore...at least not entirely. So, the appropriate indices, combinations, ratios and timing are withheld from these pages, post-2008.

JAPAN

February 8, 2009:

"At the beginning of this week, such purchases (bank held shares) (1 trillion Yen) were announced to recommence, amid cynical and disbelieving commentary, as regards to just how far reaching the effects would be on the economy. The timing is perfect and that's what I care about. The lead time to a low of about a month makes perfect sense, as yearend in Japan gets out of the way.

"Domestics are buyers of their shares, foreigners have head for their domestic hills and the BoJ is buying bank-held public shares. A recipe for a dynamic low, very soon, n'est-ce pas? Most Japanese stocks and indices have long since bottomed against foreign indices (as well as the Nikkei). They are pounding the foreign indices in Yen terms since over a year, as I have been reporting through 2008."

When a country has 40% of the world's savings and represents over 60% of Asia's GDP and market capitalization, many things are going to be true that onlookers would not simply otherwise guess, when merely aware of the obvious that plagues everyone.

Yes, Pioneer is cutting 10,000 jobs worldwide as part of the "recession", and auto manufacturers are closing for days at a time, but the here long-since and oft-reported shift of wealth and power from the West to the East has created dynamic fundamentals that could not be fully appreciated without actually going to Japan, India and China. I have done all three, but that wouldn't be necessary, to come up with the same analytic conclusions.

I've stood on Asian street corners and was therefore not surprised to read six weeks ago that Hino plans to open its first truck plant in a half-century. In terms of developed economies, there are the Americas and Europe...and then there's the "real" world – Asia. Hino trucks will continue to drive by every street corner for decades to come, or longer.

Off the Wall:

The Nikkei News reported today that the...

"The H7 bird flu virus has been detected at a quail farm in Toyohashi, Aichi Prefecture, the farm ministry said Friday.

"As the infected quails have not died, the virus "may be of attenuated virulence," the Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Ministry said."

I mention this because it serves as a reminder of a few things...or it certainly will have been said reminder after this type of thing is dredged up after a rally to over 11,000, and before collapsing again (but only in terms of directionality, as the West proves contagious, though not necessarily infectious of new lows).

During this secular bear market, which will include global war, other global catastrophes will have been included, not the least of which will have been bio-terrorism such as we saw with SARS, and other calamities that destroy "strategic population." Remember, Kissinger expressed the need to win war via non-military means. Who refused to sign the bio arms treaty...in the whole wide world...who? Yes, you know his name.

In any event, my point is that when markets are at a low, this type of item above is ignored. When it is at a peak, the journalists run to cover it, as an expression of their psychology...which their own and the public sentiment that they reflect do not understand. The same piece will be used to cause hysteria. It will be on the journalists' menu (they have bullish and bearish menus from which to choose, according to the season).

Strategy

February 8, 2009:

“Japanese stocks will continue to outperform most anything, except perhaps China. In 2009, they are both relative superstars.”

Nothing to add. Note the gaining momentum versus New York since the 4th-quarter...and this is the lousy Japanese index.

SHANGHAI

This index has rallied 40% top to bottom (though pulling back slightly now), and showed itself to be the most resilient at its low (note charts in this section), as well as the most robust off its bottom – clearly the global outperformer, as forecast in these pages through the 4th-quarter. During the same time period, New York and, to a much lesser degree Japan have been under serious pressure.

There is no question that SKGS has again identified the extremes and lows in the global inter-market relationships. 2008 was easy was for hedge fund and other managers who followed SKGS, and 2009 has shaped up in like fashion.

February 8, 2009:

“Furthermore, the following chart reflects a nice uptrend and a healthy basing pattern that is well ahead of any global market. My 2008 dog of the year is my 2009 darling of the year. A pullback will create the final 2009 entry opportunity.”

Will the last month of the quarter provide us what we seek?

10 and 1-year Shanghai charts follow, respectively:

ASSET ALLOCATION (The Song Remains the Same)

25% Yen and Swiss Franc each, 50% gold (or 40% gold + 10% silver).
