

Dollar Bottom Close

November 12, 2009

ALL recent SKGS reports have maintained or supported two major points:

1. The ideal target for the Dow is 10,400;
2. since 9900, give or take, that no one should wait for it, since it is foolish to accept risk for the last dollar, while forfeiting attention to the best opportunities for the cycle ahead. This begins in earnest in 2010's New Year.

EQUITIES EVERYWHERE

Yesterday, the Dow hit 10,321.64; meanwhile, the Nikkei is breaking down and the Shanghai is rolling over from a massive right shoulder.

PRECIOUS METALS

This could coincide perfectly with the forecasted scenario possibility that would have gold retreat to $1,000 from $1,100, before an accelerated explosion toward $3,500 in this metal's next cycle.

Silver will follow the same pattern, if not degree.

DOLLAR

Sure, the Dollar is approaching some kind of cycle low, but the reversal point is when doubt causes doubt in the minds of the smart and forward-looking-money investors and forecasters. When they take a short term loss, or suspend their timing opinions, that will be the low. Soon, but not yet.
